

The University of California Cooperative Extension presents the Climate Action and Agriculture Symposium

at California State University, San Marcos

Save-the-Date: Thursday, May 30, 2019

Developing relevant policies, programs, strategies and resources to support sustainable agriculture throughout Southern California is contingent on understanding changing climate and its impact to the unique agricultural environments and industry in the region. This symposium is intended to bring together policy makers, government agencies, researchers, educators, consultants and other public and private agricultural service providers. Discussions will be centered on the San Diego County region; however, information shared may be relevant for neighboring counties.

Further details and registration coming soon.

To stay informed, subscribe to our program email list.

Contact:

Jan Gonzales (jgonzales@ucanr.edu) or Abby Barraza (afbarraza@ucanr.edu)

