

Building Volunteer Engagement: an Online Course for UC ANR Academics and Staff

Resource Guide

In 2016, UC ANR adopted Goal 9 of the division’s 2016-2020 Strategic Plan, and committed to growing, supporting, and sustaining UC ANR volunteer programs by improving volunteer management competencies. UC ANR leadership is excited to provide an online course, hosted through eXtension, called Building Volunteer Engagement, designed to build and apply these competencies.

As UC ANR academics and staff, you contribute time and effort to make high quality UC ANR volunteer programs available to residents of California. Your on-going commitment to these programs allows the University of California to realize the Extension mission, reaching hundreds of thousands youth and adults annually. Through participating in this ~45 minute course, County and/or REC Directors, Advisors, Community Education Specialists, and others who work with volunteers, will further enhance their capacity to effectively utilize volunteers across UC ANR programs.

This document describes the background of the Building Volunteer Engagement course project, identifies learning goals, answers frequently asked questions, and outlines course login instructions.

Building Volunteer Engagement Background

UC ANR volunteers, numbering 26,000 in 2018, fulfill the teaching and public service role of UC ANR. UC Master Gardener, UC Master Food Preserver, and 4-H Youth Development Program volunteers and others, account for over 2 million face-to-face contacts each year, promoting UC research-based information to the public. Building Volunteer Engagement will equip UC ANR staff and academics to develop and manage systems in which volunteers are supported to lead projects, resulting in greater program efficiency and efficacy.

Building Volunteer Engagement Learning Goals

Upon completion of this course, learners should be able to:

- Describe the benefits volunteers provide to programs and organizations
- Identify the roles and responsibilities of those involved in working with volunteers
- Identify the characteristics of an effective volunteer program
- Use the 7-step ISOTURE model to build volunteer engagement

Along the way, learners will assess their own program, using self-guided activities and resources. As a result, course participants will develop a volunteer engagement action plan to enhance volunteer-related assets and address volunteer-related challenges.
