

Designing Your Garden

By: Lynne Brosch, UCCE Master Gardener of Lake Tahoe

Recently I chose to attend a Master Gardener training class for a refresher on planning and designing your garden. I was pleasantly surprised to discover some new ideas for my future garden plans. This training is part of a public workshop coming up on May 19th as part of our Tahoe Friendly Garden Workshop Series. (See more info in this newsletter!)

Don't miss this workshop opportunity if you have a new garden area that needs some ideas, a whole yard that needs reworking or even if you are a seasoned gardener who thinks they already have everything in place. This workshop will challenge you to rethink the best placement for your present landscaping plants, answer questions on what to plant and where, how best to design your yard both front and back to have the most efficient use of your property. Do you need a natural screening from your neighbors? Do you need to plan a better space for outside entertainment? Do you want to use more natives in your landscape? Maybe you want to invite more wildlife interest or reduce your wildlife trampling? Our Master Gardeners will be able to guide you in becoming a pseudo-expert on planning an exciting and nurturing landscape for your Tahoe home.
