ANR's Learning Management System (LMS)

What is an LMS?

A tool that allows teachers to post information, assignments and even tests in a central location online where students can access them. LMS portals can also allow online students to participate in discussion boards, chat, IM, hand in assignments online and get grades. There are many types of course design. For example an LMS can also handle standalone courses where there is no interaction between instructor and student. The student studies the content, takes a quiz, and with a passing grade, gets a certificate. That's one version. And, yes, it can take credit cards, too.

ANR employs an LMS to handle online course delivery of topics for Division clientele. At the moment, the content is geared toward the people of California but in the near future, training materials will be delivered and tracked using the LMS for members of ANR.

You'll have to register to poke around, just as a student would.
