Have You Ever Heard of the Beltsville Small White Turkey?

My name is Augie Ramirez. I am 11 years old and have been in the Sierra 4-H Club for 2 years. I raise Beltsville Turkeys as part of my turkey project. They are amazing birds, but they are now considered a heritage breed and are on the critically endangered species list. As far as we know, there are only 2 true Beltsville flocks in California and I have one of them. However, the Livestock Conservancy and other organizations are actively working to save the breed, including locating and conserving old flocks in the United States and Canada.

Beltsville Turkeys were created in the 1930's at the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC) in Beltsville, Maryland. They were started primarily for smaller families and refrigerators. The breeding program, which lasted from 1934-1941, used Bronze, Narragansett, White Austrian, White Holland, and wild turkey genetics to create the desired smaller white-plumaged birds. They were officially recognized by the American Poultry Association in 1951. They are shown as a breed bird, not market most of the time.

The Beltsville Whites, in my opinion, are some of the sweetest turkeys you can ever have. They also weigh 10-17 lbs. compared to the Broad Chested White at 38-40 lbs. So if you are interested in helping to conserve this amazing bird, contact me and we can get started.
