In this workshop, there will be lecture, demonstrations, and hands-on practice on:

- Fundamentals of tree pruning
- Tool care and disease prevention
- How to evaluate tree growth before cutting
- Different types of pruning cuts

Tree pruning is essential for maintaining tree health. It helps promote growth and fruit production, prevent diseases and pests, and improve tree structure and safety.

Participants are encouraged to bring gloves and pruning tools if available. Participants will practice pruning trees in small groups guided by UC Master Gardeners. Please dress according to the weather as part of the workshop may be outdoors. In case of rain/snow, the workshop will be held entirely indoors.

*This free workshop is sponsored by the University of California Cooperative Extension.
University of California Agriculture & Natural Resources is an equal opportunity provider.*
